2017 JONES MEMORIAL LECTURE

Working toward barrier-free education: Utilizing perspectives of students who are D/HH to address concerns of fatigue, isolation and access.

This presentation will provide participants an understanding of the value of utilizing Universal Design for Learning as a framework for navigating and supporting varying academic and social barriers in classroom settings for students who are D/HH. The benefits of first-hand information on the state of inclusive education for the participating students, the quality of education for D/HH students, socialization with hearing peers, and the need for vocational training will also be discussed.

7:00 PM - 8:30 PM

ASL Interpretation & CART provided.
Reception with light refreshments will follow the lecture.

About Dr. Natalia Rohatyn-Martin:

Based in Edmonton, Alberta, Natalia has consulted locally and provincially. Her presentations include provincial professional development days throughout Alberta, as well as various national and international leading conferences including ICED, ACE-DHH and CSSE. She completed an undergraduate degree in Psychology at York University, an after degree in Education and her Masters at The University of Western Ontario, and recently has completed her PhD at the University of Alberta. As a teacher and as the sister of a Deaf sibling who was educated in both specialized and mainstream settings, her desire to educate audiences on the importance of student perceptions of inclusion is a strong passion.
